In that dream, after I whispered that phrase in his year, the screen to my right now had a change, while previously I had prayed verbally, then looked at the screen, then prayed in tongues, and looked again, but there was no change. After the screen changed showing the motions of a normal person, he got up from the hospital bed which was laid in open, and got down from it, and I was smiling as he was healed and now up. Then I moved towards him to my right, and he was looking straight, and when I stood close to him facing him on his left side - his head close to my bosom because of his short stature (around 5 feet tall) - he looked away to his right with an expressionless face and then walked away in front of me as I watched him. And while this took place, I could hear a few voices that said in Hindi, "She was to be married to him." After he was out of my sight, I turned to the other side to answer the lady that came forward to question me and I said - 'God did this', after which the dream ended.

Because of the things that must be ensuing before this event, I sometimes feel a bit scared, and it makes me want to stay away from him, because I don't want anyone have their perception of life ruined, though it's all a delusion on earth. I've become quite comfortable with this reality, but it may be hard for others to accept - but if they do accept it, it would be the best thing that could happen to them. You have to lose your life on Earth and your perception of it in order to find it with God in Heaven.

I had this dream back when I was at home during the lockdown in 2020.

Whatever past sins he is carrying in his bag, he needs to repent of them and be transformed, be it incest or other sins - repent together with the other guilty party and enter the ark together with her in order that they may escape this earthly trap - a temporary party meant to delude people away from God - an attempt to hide from Him and do one's own thing.
